SKYLER KAPEL

Hello Claire's Team!

Wow, what an amazing role you are hiring for! This position as a Beauty Products Designer sounds like one of the most exciting roles you could offer, with so much room for play, imagination, and creativity. I am fully confident my skills, not just in industrial design and branding, but my sense of childlike creativity, rapid iteration, technical concepting skills, and love of product design, would fit this role like no other.

The methodology of bringing physical play into everyday products is something I could not connect with more. Throughout my design and life experience, bringing physicality and novel ideas to light is something my brain is always doing, regardless of the context. I have a philosophy where, instead of thinking "everything's already been designed," I like to think there is always room for innovation when you focus on joy, combine existing ideas to create something new, and remain fully willing to dive into iteration and take pride in the process.

At my current position, my team and I are always looking for how to push things like that in a cost-effective way through packaging. One example of this is a case that comes with a silicone mold for ice to create something of a game when dispensing drinks, serving as a super postable, interactive moment.

Additionally, one of my personal projects explores how to improve mental health through organization, making it engaging through artistic displays that don't just hold jewelry, but become part of a room's aura and the user's self-expression.

For my thesis project, I took an honest look at the role our phones play in modern-day social situations, addressing it through a fashion and accessories solution. Additionally, I've designed magnetic speakers built for ritualistic play in third spaces as part of my previous studio. These were to encourage socializing during the isolation after COVID.

Finally, as someone who has experience with makeup and similar beauty products (and rhinestones, of course), I know the roles different types of products play in one's rituals and how to find opportunities to fill out and combine these niches.

Thank you for your time and consideration,

Skyler

Beauty Design claire's®